Getting to Zhuhai: what are the best options?

RT International Events and Communication Director, David Gibbons, offers some suggestions:

You now have more options to reach Zhuhai after landing in Hong Kong. You can still catch a train and then a ferry from downtown Hong Kong (a long trip). But the quicker, cheaper route is the new Hong Kong-Macau/Zhuhai Sea bridge.

There are two options if you choose to use the sea bridge: a VIP Ride Share (my preferred option) or public shuttle buses (which is more awkward).

Pre-Travel Tips:	Prepare some cash:	<ol style="list-style-type: none">1. If you are travelling through Hong Kong, have some small currency HK dollars with you.2. For example, you will need HK$10 to catch the B4 bus from Hong Kong Airport to the Hong Kong-Macau-Zhuhai-Bridge Border, and no change is given. Credit cards are not accepted either.3. There is a TRAVELEX booth in the Arrivals area of HK Airport (see photo) that can exchange US dollars, Euros and Chinese RMB on the spot.4. Arriving in mainland China with some RMB is also helpful, especially if you do not have cash in the WeChat App wallet. 200RMB (about US$30) will be sufficient for taxis etc.5. Apart from your hotel, you will most likely not be able to use credit cards for buses and taxis.

	Prepare the name and address of your hotel in Chinese:	<ol style="list-style-type: none">1. Ask your hotel to send the name and address to you in Chinese.2. Show this hard copy or digital copy (on your phone) to your taxi driver to help avoid confusion and get you to the right place.
	Load WeChat onto your mobile device	<ol style="list-style-type: none">1. Have it operational before you leave home;2. WeChat is an effective tool to engage with your suppliers even after you return home:<ol style="list-style-type: none">a. it can translate signs and text into your own language;b. it has a wallet to store money for easy transactions in supermarkets, taxis, street vendors etc.
